Your Future

If you're interested in nutrition, hospitality–culinary arts, family studies or fashion, the Department of Nutrition, Hospitality & Human Services in the College of Education and Human Development will prepare you to enter the workforce successfully.

All of our programs are practical, and the skills and knowledge you'll learn here can be applied in a variety of different industries as well as in your personal life. Our four programs offer undergraduate degrees and one graduate degree, in addition to internship opportunities, teacher certification, and a certificate in the culinary arts.

Dedicated faculty and staff apply a hands-on approach with the curriculum, allowing you to gain early experience in preparation for a gratifying career. As a whole, our goal is to seek students who share a desire to elevate the life experiences of individuals, families and the community by focusing on the most fundamental needs of humanity. If you have a passion to help others thrive, we can prepare you to find fulfillment in a career rooted in one of our programs.
