Justin LeBlanc (b. 1986, Texas)
justinleblanc.com

Lamar University, Beaumont
Bachelors of General Studies, 2010

Superiority Complex

This series of paintings is about America, this nation that was built through genocide and slavery, our country where we can’t build institutions that allow people to live with dignity because the only thing we have left is culture war. When you are born into a life that serves capital, where you are too busy to step back and reflect as a community, you never have the opportunity to understand who you are in opposition to. So white people blame anyone that doesn’t look like us for our problems, while the people that do look like us are the face of our exploitation, running the world to their benefit at the cost of everyone else’s immiseration. We are a society that goes to extreme lengths to protect capitalism, protect imperialism, and to prevent equality, no matter the horrors and no matter how much we suffer from them.