The Impact of Undergraduate Research on becoming a Speech-Language Pathologist Professional

The field of Speech-Language Pathology involves information and evidence-based practice that is constantly changing to improve the communication and quality of life of our patients. Learning how to find and interpret the latest research has proved to be a valuable skill set within a professional work setting. Participation in undergraduate research, including the exposure to respected professionals already in the field, has had direct and indirect benefits. This presentation will discuss the impact undergraduate research had on my graduate education and professional life.
